Undaunted seems the spirit of jollity at the White this long and successful season, whing parties, card parties, and candy the same with the same seems the rainy days bright of fleeting, while driving and riding fill the clear, cross-mornings and afternoons that can exhibit and pleasure to be entyed nowhere as in the mountains. The large upon the great hills and in the fall and picturesoue valleys is turning a lilliant crimson and gold, while that arly loved nutting time is almost at and.

The last and seemingly best party of the season was given on Tuesday evening by Mrs. Pembroke Jones at her cottage to celebrate the tin wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frazier. A charming and most novel entertainment paid tribute to this popular young couple. Each guest presented their compliments with gayly-beribboned tin. young couple. Each guest presented their compliments with gayly-beriboned tin-ware, the ornamental as well as useful finding its way among the mementoes. Music and all manner of enlivening games were indulged until supper was served. The most delicious imaginable. Champagne frappe ne'er tasted so well as it did out of tin cups tied with pink and blue ribbons, while the other pink and brewers and recollections of a jolly time that will never rade. Those present were Miss Kenan, Miss French, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frazier, Mrs. William Talbott, Mrs. William Dickson, Mrs. Robert Bosher, Mr. and Mrs. George Taylor, Miss Virgie Brock, Miss Martha Bagby, and Miss Judith Carrington.

Improvements for next season are already occupying the proprietor and his competent force, so as this closes in success the future promises even greater strides in means of making this the greatest of southern summer health and pleasure resorts, an Elysian field which all will seek.

Escape of the Crew.

MR. STEARNS'S WHEAT CROP.

elonging to the first-named gen-They did not, however, find the heat, secure the insurance on it, pture the pirates.

Then commenced a stern chase in a double sense, and, like all stern chases, it was a long one. It was discovered that the Simpson was registered from Camden, N. J., and that when last heard from she was at Westerly, R. I. This latter place was visited, but the pirate had sailed away. The next trace was from Stonington, Conn., where it was stated the craft was loading for Perth Amboy, and at this port a trap was set for her. However, the wily Brown must have gotten wind of the game of the enemy, for instead of making Ferth Amboy he put into New Haven, Conn. But he reckoned without his bost in this manœuvre. Scouts for the pursuing party were on the outlook, and soon after the vessel arrived at New Haven, a deputy marshal boarded her and notice was sent to the pursuers that she had been tied up

But, as before stated, the pirates were not captured. In New Haven the news of the steal had become noised about among the ship-brokers, and one of these happening to see Brown passing his establishment just after he landed asked him merely as a joke if he was the man who stole that cargo of wheat down in Virginia. The broker was entirely innocent of the fact that Brown was suspected, but, as the story goes, the pirate turned pale, took a reef in his beard, and scudded to the wharf at Flying-Dutchman speed. Reaching his crait before the deputy marshal he burned all his papers, piped all hands except the cook to the yawl, and pulled away. Before leaving he told the cook, who is a mere youth, to prepare a feast, as he and his companions would return by 12 o'clock. At last accounts the cook was sitting astride of the stove-pipe singing "Come back, my ocean rovers, come," but there was no sign of their coming.

did not appear, urging him to press the collection for "that cargo of wheat," as he (Brown) was in need of the money.

The Simpson will be sold to indemnify Mr. Stearns for the loss of the wheat. Much of the expense attaching to the chase was caused by the delay in securing the necessary papers to seige the schooner should she be found, but it was determined in the interest of the public to run her down at all hazards and at any cost. At Perth Amboy the municipal authorities said they had no power to act in the matter, but agreed to take the risk if the collector of customs of the port would cooperate with them. The latter could not act without certain papers, but he promised Mr. Winston that if the Simpson ever got in there he would manage that she never got out.
